You want your skin to look more youthful, but you don't want it to seem as if you've had a lot of work done, and you need the improvement to look gradual. A treatment that meets these requirements is PDRN Modern Therapy by LUSH Aesthetics.

This microinjection face treatment hails from South Korea and is popularly known as a "baby-skin booster". It uses an ingredient derived from salmon DNA to stimulate cellular repair and skin renewal.

The ingredient is clinically proven to heal the skin by improving cell regeneration, and to protect it by strengthening the skin barrier and increasing moisture levels. On the skin surface, this translates into smoothing pitted acne scars, plumping up fine lines and wrinkles, refining skin texture and giving you a glowing complexion.

The treatment, which is said to be comfortable and with little downtime for most patients, starts with the application of a topical numbing cream on cleansed skin. Then a special microneedle (called the meso-injector) is used to administer tiny amounts of the ingredient at specific facial points, depending on your needs.

After one session, your complexion looks instantly brighter and more refreshed, and enlarged pores appear to be less obvious. As skin cells need time to repair and regenerate, further improvements in skin tone, firmness and texture can be seen three to four weeks after the treatment.
